

ABSTRACT

A method of determining the in-band service channel frequency for a cable system involves transmitting such frequency using an out-of band channel. The set top box, typically during initialization, receives the out-of-band communication, determines the in-band service channel frequency, and communicates with the cable system by means of a return path.